“Medical mentoring gives students a true perspective of potential fields of interest by being able to collaborate with the professional and seeing all the duties that professional has throughout the day,” said Kayla Sutton, science teacher at KHS. “It also gives students the chance to form professional relationships in the healthcare community for future shadowing opportunities.”

These students have a strong desire to obtain a degree in the health care field. They will spend their summer experiencing these professions first-hand and they will have the opportunity to shadow a variety of medical professionals. The Fox Valley Medical Mentoring program is a great example of collaboration between area organizations and schools to provide opportunities for students to reach their potential.
